FORMIA

FORMIA is about 80 kilometres from Naples and 120 kilometres from Rome, and has excellent train connections. Overlooking the Gulf of Gaeta, Formia is surrounded by Aurunci Mountains. It has almost 37,000 inhabitants and is easily accessible by an efficient road and railway system.

The beauty of the coast, the mild climate, and the marvelous beaches and bay, as well as the interesting archaeological sites, offer the opportunity for sailors and their families to spend a great holiday in Formia and the nearby Gaeta.

The bay of Gaeta is well known to sailors for its natural shelter made by the arc of its gulf, offering a secure refuge to seafarers traveling along the Tyrrhenian sea. The view from the sea is remarkable for its beautiful combination of natural and manmade elements developed throughout the course of history.

The town of Formia was heavily damaged during the Second World War, in 1944. Yet recent restoration works allow the appreciation of a remarkable artistic heritage, which stirs up the emotions.

Formia is one of the oldest towns of the South Pontine Area. Its name derives from the Greek hormiai (landing place) which, according to the legend, was one of the places where Ulysses' ships docked and set sail with the presence of Lestrigoni (ancient cannibal giants) on board. Formia keeps several and remarkable testimonies of its past and it has been appreciated as tourist destination from the Roman to Middle Ages, as the ruins of many villas testify.

The most famous guest of the town was Marcus Tullius Cicero. He was the owner of a villa called Formianum. During the Civil War, supervised the political actions of Rome from the Formianum. Cicero was later joined by his wife Terenzia and his daughter Tulliola, who, according to the tradition, is buried on the slope in front of her father's tomb. In 43 BC, Mark Antony's hired assassins murdered Cicero.

Nearby to Formia, in the bay, there is Gaeta the city that gives its name to the gulf. Lovely city. Gaeta is a picturesque town in the Lazio Region in Southern Italy. It was in the middle ages that Gaeta, built upon the extreme headland of the rocky promontory, started playing a lead role over a large territory, creating an autonomous and independent Dukedom.

The presence of the huge historical buildings originated during that age, and still offers a great skyline view, characterized by the Mausoleum of Roman Consul Munazio Planco located on the top of Monte Orlando Hill, as well as the Aragonese and Angionian Castle along with many monumental churches spanning the centuries.
